To help readers cope with corona anxiety series under which our panel of expert queries. This week's advice comes

I am a 24-year-old woman. I was a very good student, but my parents didn't support me in furthering my studies. Eight months after graduation, I joined an HR consultancy. They didn't give me proper training, so I couldn't adjust. Since then I have changed three jobs. I had become very low during that time. I then joined a firm, and all was going well but one day my manager suddenly told me that I need not come. My health took a hit. I have recently joined another firm, but things are on hold due to the pandemic. I really feel depressed. Even though it's been two years since graduation, I don't have any experience as such. Please help me.

The stress that you have been going through can be really overwhelming. Try to challenge your negative thoughts. This would help you deal with the loss and move on. Find other ways to define yourself. Pursue activities that bring purpose and joy to life. Try a new hobby. Exercise is a powerful antidote to stress as it releases powerful endorphins to lift your mood. Most successful people have experienced major setbacks in their careers but have turned things around by picking themselves up, learning from their experiences, and trying again. You can do the same.

I am a woman in my late thirties. For the last five months, I've been abused by my parents. As of now I'm jobless. They blame me for the difficulties in my personal and professional life. I am working towards finding a better job once the pandemic ends, but my family is making things difficult, denying me food at times. They want to marry me off. I'm stressed. Please help.
