What will be covered –

The importance of research publishing can be defined by a simple quote of Gerard Piel, which says “Without publication, science is dead.” The first scientific journal was published in 1665 and we have travelled 358 years since then. In the last two decades, research and reporting of research have undergone revolutionary changes. Computerization and Internet have changed the traditional ways of reading and writing. Hence, it is very important for researchers in all disciplines to understand the complete process of writing and publishing of research paper in good journals and comprehend the process of academic book publishing. There is also a downside of digital publishing. The principal challenge for publishers is to handle ethical issues and it is of utmost importance for the authors to understand the ethical practices involved in the process. The talk is designed to provide information on different elements of publishing and on how to make use of various author services for the publishing work.
